

White-eyed Vireo

A White-eyed Vireo showing off its white eyes and colorful forehead.

Description

The White-eyed Vireo is more often heard than seen. It has a gray head with yellow on its face and underside. You'll notice a yellow underside and face with an olive-colored back and white wing bars.

Experiences & anecdotes

- 8/7/2021 - This was the day that the White-eyed Vireo finally cooperated for a blurry, mediocre photo.
- 3/11/2023 - Because this bird is very vocal and shy, it is a great target to record. It makes a chk-vireo-chk sound that sounds like no other bird I hear. Its song is conspicuous and easy to pick out from the cacophony of the forest.

Captured media

Photographs

The first time the Vireo decided to make a quick appearance. I was able to snap this quick, but blurry photo of it.

This photo attempt was much better with ideal lighting. You can really see the white eyes.

Audio recordings

- ML518169001- 0:43
  - The White-eyed Vireo in this clip sounds extremely agitated with its rapid calls that went on and on.

  - Listen to the distinct call of the White-eyed Vireo. Chk Vireo Chk!

- ML539724621- 1:27

- This bird calls without the final chk. Halfway through the clip it switches its song to an even more complicated version.
